1. Antenatal Care

Antenatal care is routine care during pregnancy and supports health promotion, screening, diagnosis, disease prevention, and a positive pregnancy experience.

It includes nutrition, maternal and fetal assessment, preventive interventions, symptom management, and person-centred care.

2. Contacts

WHO's 2016 model recommended eight contacts with a health provider during pregnancy. Local systems may adapt schedules using newer or context-specific guidance.

Early contact supports assessment and planning of ongoing care.

3. Maternal and Fetal Assessment

Maternal assessment can include blood pressure, symptoms, nutritional status, and other clinically relevant factors.

Fetal assessment may include monitoring growth and other investigations according to gestational age, clinical context, and local protocols.

4. Nutrition and Prevention

WHO antenatal guidance includes nutrition interventions and updates concerning multiple micronutrients, vitamin D, and zinc.

Preventive care may also include infection prevention and vaccination according to local guidance and risk profile.

5. Symptoms and Escalation

Nausea, vomiting, constipation, heartburn, and fatigue can occur during pregnancy.

Severe, sudden, persistent, or concerning symptoms require clinical evaluation. A general RAG chatbot should not diagnose emergencies.

6. Birth Preparedness

Prenatal care can include birth planning, place of delivery, transportation, emergency contacts, support people, and newborn-care preparation.

Plans should remain flexible because clinical circumstances can change.

7. Person-Centred Care

WHO emphasizes a positive pregnancy experience and person-centred care, including dignity, preferences, privacy, and informed participation.

RAG Test Questions

- What is the purpose of antenatal care?
- How many contacts did the WHO 2016 model recommend?
- What can maternal assessment include?
- Why is ultrasound not a substitute for complete prenatal care?
- Which nutritional interventions have WHO updates?
- What does person-centred care mean?
- What should a chatbot do with emergency or individualized-treatment questions?

Unknown / Out-of-Scope Questions

- Can you diagnose preeclampsia from my blood pressure?
- Which hospital should I deliver at in Dhaka?
- What exact medication dose should I take for bleeding?
- Can you guarantee a complication-free pregnancy?
